Vista, CA - Waterless Co. Inc, manufacturer of Waterless® No-Flush urinals and restroom fixture supplies, introduces no-water urinal systems designed specifically for the cruise ship and boating industries.

The company is the oldest and one of the largest manufacturers of no-water urinal systems. One no-water urinal eliminates the need for as much as 40,000 gallons of water annually.

Waterless developed and patented the EcoTrap® system. Considered one of the most effective in the industry, it allows waste to empty down the urinal's drain while providing a barrier, blocking odors from being released.

It is installed in no-water systems in schools, army bases, office buildings, convention centers, and other facilities around the world.

“We have been studying the needs of the cruise ship industry and port facilities for quite some time now,” says Klaus Reichardt, CEO and founder of Waterless.

“It is an industry that is getting increasingly environmentally conscious, especially when it comes to water use and the reduction in effluent charges.”

Reichardt notes that many cruise lines have already incorporated a number of environmentally responsible practices that help reduce fuel, energy, and water needs.

“But cruise ships consume huge amounts of water. Installing waterless urinal systems and similar fixtures reduces flushing water needs, reduce HT quantities, can lower fuel consumption and reduce effluent charges, and cut other costs.”

Reichardt adds his company plans to work directly with cruise ship companies to help determine “how much water can be saved [after installing waterless urinals] and how this can translate into fuel and cost savings for cruise line owners.”
