Restroom Care: Crusader For Restroom Hygiene Speaks Out

Company Website

Tracey Gietler is “fighting a crusade” to make U.S. restrooms cleaner and more hygienic. And to win this war, she has become a franchisee of Cannon Hygiene, U.S.

She and her husband purchased the rights to a South Carolina franchise territory with the backing of Cannon Hygiene’s reputation for setting the highest standards of restroom hygiene all over the world.

The service involves Cannon Hygiene’s Restroom Hygiene Service Systems, offering distinctively designed touch-free feminine hygiene disposal units, a variety of environmentally friendly restroom odor-neutralizers, hand-sanitizers, infant-care products, automatic touch-free faucet/flushes systems, and other restroom products.

“The ‘trash can’ approach to feminine napkin disposal is simply no longer acceptable” Gietler says. “It is not healthy, safe for the environment, or [safe for] the cleaning professional who must service these containers.”

According to Gietler, Cannon Hygiene is devoted to improving the health and hygiene of America’s restrooms, “and that’s why I believe my crusade for cleaner and more hygienic restrooms and Cannon Hygiene are a perfect fit.”
