

Respondents questioned on growing and declining markets

6/25/2010 8:09:34 AM

HAMILTON, OH — The May 2010 issue of Kai-Leidoscope, the monthly newsletter of Kaivac Inc., originators of the No-Touch Cleaning system, included a survey asking which market sectors the subscribers expect to be growing the most — and the least — in the next five years, according to the Kai-Leidoscope.

According to the responses, nearly two-thirds are confident that the health care sector — doctor's offices, medical centers and other health-related facilities — will grow the most in the coming years.

On the other hand, 33 percent of the respondents believe residential cleaning will grow the least in coming years, the article stated.

"Most of the respondents also seem fairly optimistic about their own companies in years to come," said Matt Morrison, communications manager for Kaivac.

"Fifty-six percent believe they will be growing in the next five years, with most of the rest indicating they expect their businesses to be about 'the same' as they are now," Morrison added.
